Founder and CEO of Génération Politique
Hind Ziane is the founder and CEO of Génération Politique, a GovTech company based in Paris, France. Génération Politique was created in 2018 with the ambition to develop innovative solutions dedicated to the public sector.

Today, Génération Politique builds tech tools for politicians and public institutions to help them tackle issues related to participation, government efficiency and policy planning. Génération Politique's vision is to help transform governments, internationally.

French and American politics

Before founding her business, Hind Ziane worked for more than 3 years with an American politician and entrepreneur who led the Gen44 community organizing initiative in Ohio during former President B. Obama's campaigns. He was later on appointed by the President at the Department of Energy. During those years, she worked on political and social projects with institutions such as the UNESCO, the White House, or the USAID. She also worked with the office of a US Congresswoman in Texas and was in charge of gathering co-sponsorships for a bill that sought to provide assistance to veterans with severe PTSD.

Her experience in American politics was completed by an experience in the French private and public sectors working with French politicians, focusing mainly on public administration and public affairs.
